A Formal Challenge to the Associated Press, Reuters, and Major News Organizations.

On May 5, 2026, the Georgia Supreme Court suspended Clayton County Assistant District Attorney Deborah Leslie for six months. She submitted AI-generated legal briefs containing fabricated case citations and nonexistent legal references in the Hannah Payne murder appeal. The lower court adopted portions of the flawed order, which the Supreme Court later vacated. Over 1,500 similar AI-related failures in court documents have been documented globally.

Today, I released NextXus — a complete, publicly available system designed to solve this problem.

NextXus uses a two-layer verification process. Agent Zero middleware first applies a strict 95% Truth Gate. Only content meeting this threshold proceeds to the public record. Content below the threshold is logged for transparency but is never added to the official ledger.

Clean data then passes to the Ring of 12 — twelve independent analytical perspectives, each running internal verification — which produce a graded consensus assessment.

All records are stored in an immutable, append-only ledger. Nothing is ever deleted. Original entries can only be amended with new verified information. Every step is permanently auditable.

I formally challenge your organizations to examine and test this system against the Deborah Leslie case and the wider database of AI failures. Full documentation is available at github.com/keyhole-creator/nextxus-truth-site.

I invite complete scrutiny. Any issues found will be addressed transparently.
